organizers: Sharon Elise, CSU San Marcos & Jennifer Eichstedt, Humboldt State
presenters: Sharon Elise, Marisol Flores, Fredi Garcia & Anthony Blacksher, CSU San Marcos & Jennifer Eichstedt, Humboldt State Univ.
[Participants will be challenged to engage race, class, gender, and sexuality critically. This workshop is partly based on a multi-media art and theatre installation that Jennifer hosted at Humboldt State Univ., which included confronting attendees with a variety of cultural forms, including a “theatre of the oppressed” where different voices, including the “audience” articulated racism and antiracism. The workshop also will include the performance of poetry and will create active participation by attendees. Our goals are to encourage sociologists to think more creatively about how to teach for social justice, and to challenge the discipline of sociology to consider creative analytical work to “count” as academic work and receive credit towards tenure for it (e.g., poetry and artistic work, community events.)]

107) Presidential Session: Sociology Today: Greater than the Sum of its Parts?

organizer: Roberta Spalter-Roth, American Sociological Association

[Note: There is strong pessimism among some sociologists that we are losing status in the academy because sociology no longer has a core but rather a series of unrelated specialties. Is this the case, especially in institutions of higher education with norms that increasingly support "interdisciplinarity" and entrepreneurship?

This session examines the "increased specialization equals low status" argument by investigating the work that sociologists do and the power and relation of specialties in sociology. The three presenters question the core versus specialty dichotomy.

Panelists examine what skills, concepts, and specialties sociologists learn in school and what they take with them into positions outside as well as inside professorate.

They examine how centrality and specialization can be measured, whether by size, or by patterns of influence, and whether or not crossing specialties and engaging in integrative work promotes breakthroughs in sociology.]

193A Video Ethnography as Pedagogical Device: Elements of the Biker Subculture

organizer & presenter: Scott A. Reid, Univ of Texas Brownsville

This work delineates the incorporation of video ethnography as a pedagogical device in university classroom settings. Via this medium, students are enabled to witness first-hand, 'real world' phenomenon that otherwise prove inaccessible. Video ethnography in the current work involves a multiplicity of motorcycle rallies and associated activities with a focus on the internationally based Gypsy motorcycle club. The ethnography accentuates a plethora of elements that collectively comprise subcultures, group reality construction processes, hierarchically based role expectations, and status affirming social rituals.

[Note, wine & cheese will be served during this session.]
